INTRODUCTION

The building plots are situated on Church Road within the village of Auchencairn. The land is offered in one lot and is included within the Dumfries & Galloway Council's local development plan (Ref: AUC.H2). The LDP is supported by several pieces of supplementary guidance, planning guidance and various land use audits which can be found on the Council's Development Planning webpages at www.dumgal.gov.uk/LDP.

At present the land is utilised for agricultural purposes and subject to the necessary consents would make a stunning site for residential development for up to five units. The property occupies about 4710 m², as indicated on the plan which forms part of these particulars.

Auchencairn is an attractive village of whitewashed stone cottages, mainly dating from the early 17th century. It is located on the heritage coastline of the Solway Estuary, a National Scenic Area of unspoiled hills, cliffs, islands, bays and beaches known locally as the Scottish Riviera.

The village is on the A711 coast road from Dalbeattie to Kirkcudbright and provides a quiet and pretty base for exploring all that the area has to offer walkers, cyclists and wildlife. Auchencairn enjoys a particularly mild climate due to its coastal position and there is a lively and welcoming community that takes pride in the appearance and history of the village, several craft and specialist businesses operate successfully here.

A wider range of professional services can be found in the nearby towns of Dalbeattie, Castle Douglas and Kirkcudbright.
